Marvin Waller was born in New York City in 1928. He began drawing and painting at an early age, and by the time he was a teenager, he was already selling his work to local galleries. After graduating from high school, Waller studied at the Art Students League in New York City. There, he studied under some of the most influential artists of the time, including Reginald Marsh and Yasuo Kuniyoshi.

After graduating from the Art Students League, Waller began his career as a professional artist. He quickly gained a reputation for his unique style of painting. His work is often characterized by its use of bright colors and bold brushstrokes. Waller often painted scenes of everyday life, but with a touch of surrealism. His paintings are often full of unexpected juxtapositions and strange occurrences.

Waller's work has been exhibited in museums and galleries around the world. He has also been the subject of several books and articles. In 1994,

Waller died of cancer at the age of 66.

Legacy

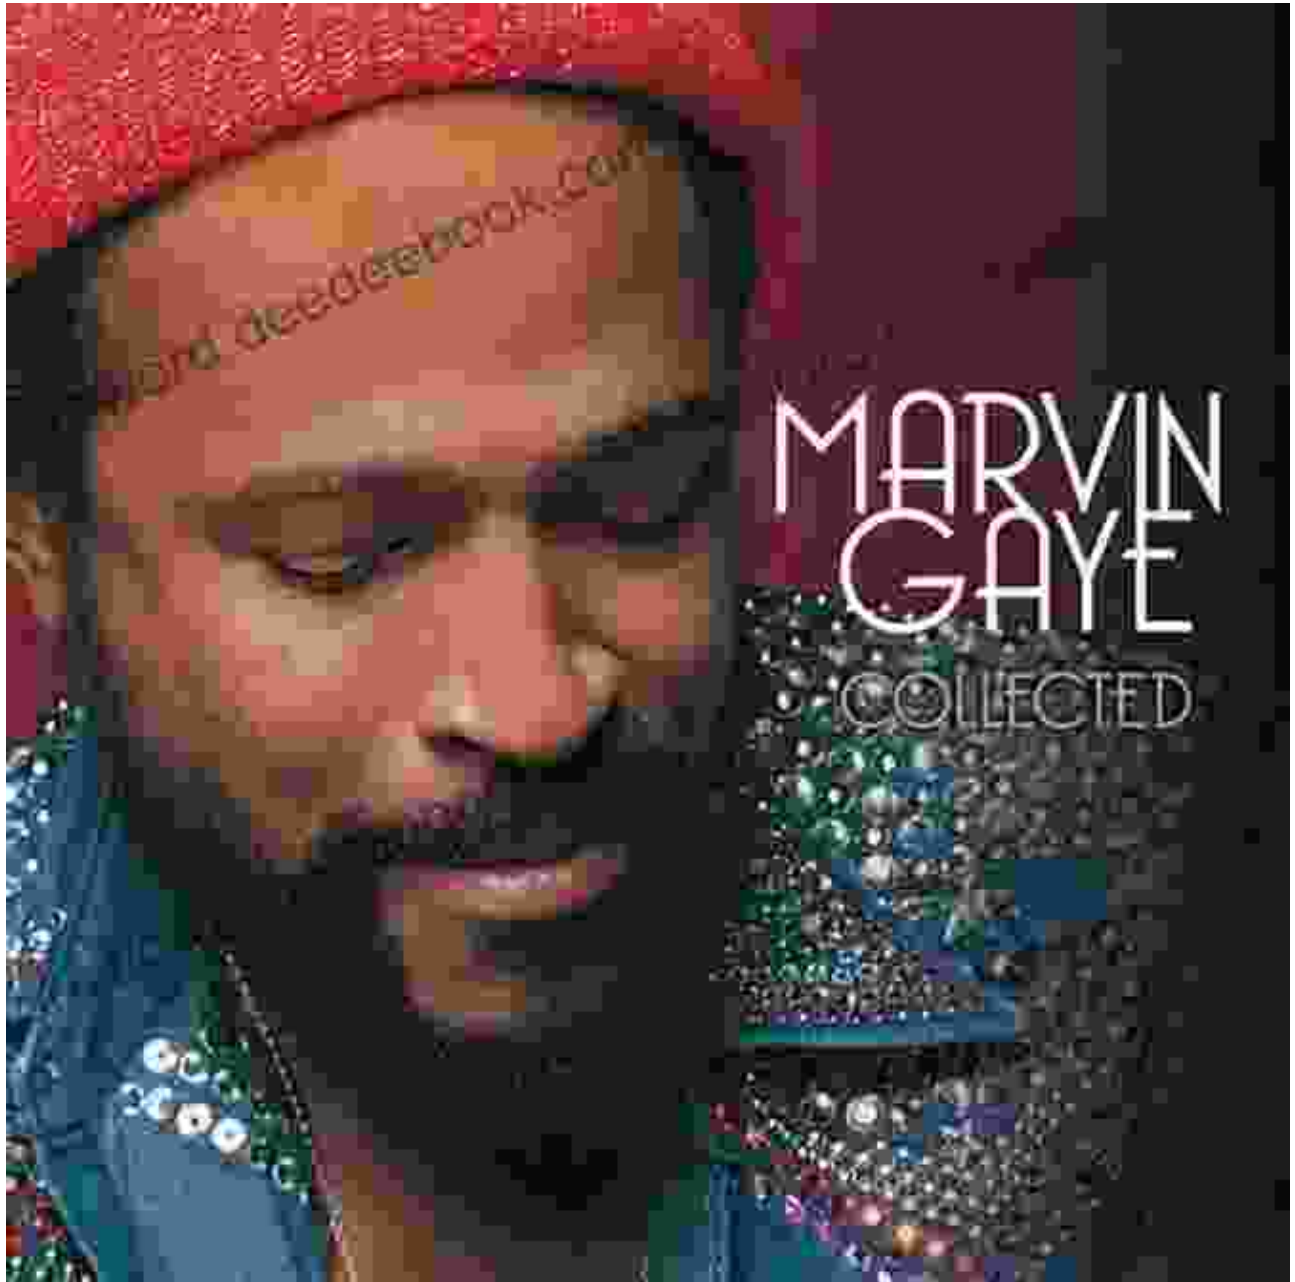

Marvin Waller is considered one of the most important American artists of the 20th century. His work has been praised for its originality, wit, and technical skill. Waller's paintings continue to be exhibited in museums and galleries around the world, and his work is highly sought-after by collectors.

Waller's work has had a significant influence on other artists, including David Hockney, Robert Rauschenberg, and Jasper Johns. His work has also been featured in several films and television shows.
